

As a matter of fact, the issue is convoluted and contentious one. Many people do not think that knowing about events that occur around the world is crucial. They may think that those events are so far away from them that they don't need to know about those things because it is less likely to affect them. However, I believe that it is pretty important to know about those events. I feel this way for several reasons.

quite

First of all, I am quiet in favor of the concept of "global village", which means that the whole world is small enough that each country and individual can easily have the influence on each other. One only need to take a look at trading. With the help of technology, the trade now is very prosperous, and it is possible that the price of oil in the western Asia can impact on that of your own country. If you don't know about the price of oil or think that the price of other countries will not affect your daily life, it is especially wrong since the world is very small, and every things appears in other countries may have indirect influence on your country or even individual.

In addition, if knowing about events happening around the world, it is hard to communicate with foreigners in modern society. The reason I presented here is that nowadays, more and more foreigners go to other countries for traveling or business. Without knowing the events occurring in those foreigners' country, people say something violating the current circumstances of their country, which leads to the opportunity to make friends or earn many.

Lastly, it is possible that a man will go to another country in business. If he doesn't know that the war breaks out in that country, it is very dangerous for him. However, if he knows about that, he can ask the boss to stop that business. That is, knowing about events happening around the world can also help people prevent from hazards

In conclusion, while some people may still remain unconvinced, the reason I have analyzed in above argument should at least make them aware of the complexities of the issue under discussion. I still think that it is important to know about events happening around the world because of the concept of global village, the opportunities to make friends and earn money, and the prevention from something dangerous.